

President's Day is not just another excuse for a big sale at your favorite store. Originally President's Day started as a day to celebrate our first President, George Washington, on his actual birthday. At this time George Washington was revered as one of the most important and influential men in U.S. history. It became a Federal holiday in the late 1870's becoming only the fifth Federal banking holiday in the United States. In 1971, it was decided that it be moved to the third Monday in order to meet a certain number of extended weekends that workers could enjoy away from work. It was also moved to honor the birthdays of both Washington and Lincoln. Today we celebrate all Presidents past and present on President's Day.
